Introducing the Eco chefswear range

Uniforms shouldn't cost the earth

The Eco Chefswear collection, is a culmination of years of dedicated research and innovation, all crafted from sustainable fabrics. This chefs uniform not only meets the practical needs of culinary professionals but also allows you to make the right choice for the environment.

Identifying Environmental Challenges

This journey began by examining the environmental impact of traditional fabrics used to make chefs uniforms. With a focus on reducing the reliance on virgin polyester, startling statistics about plastic pollution were uncovered:

- 90% of plastic is still derived from fossil fuels
- 1 in 3 fish now contains plastic
- 8 million pieces of plastic enter our oceans daily.
- This pollution contributes to the deaths of 100,000 marine mammals, turtles, and 1 million seabirds each year.

Furthermore, conventional cotton farming practices often lead to soil erosion, biodiversity loss, and harmful pesticide application. Recognising these challenges, CLEAN sought sustainable alternatives to reduce our environmental impact.

Why this fabric stands out

This fabric not only ensures durability and a soft feel but also exemplifies our dedication to sustainability, reducing C02 emissions and curbing plastic waste. Our Eco Chefswear Range is more than attire; it's a conscious choice for chefs who strive for excellence while making a positive impact on the planet.

Reduces Plastic Waste

Each chef jacket saves over 11 plastic bottles from landfills and oceans.

Promotes Circular Economy

By using recycled materials, plastic waste is diverted from the environment.

Lower Energy Consumption

Our recycled polyester production uses up to 53% less energy than virgin polyester.

Supports Sustainable Farming

The Better Cotton Initiative (BCI) supports sustainable farming with less pesticide use and better water management.
